

[illegible]

Within the last few days, however, the seething discontent longed about the highways and byways of Augusta, have wonderfully thinned out. Many, yielding to the pinches of inexorable necessity, or becoming convinced that such was their better course, have returned to their homes and homes. Others, however, unusual, and many others have, by the efforts of the authorities, been provided with places where they can support themselves, and be useful to the country. Not a few of them have been separated from their families, and sent to the camps, and the result of all these drains has been to permit the military and the citizens to breathe freer once more. So far as we learn by the reports, the people are becoming calmer, and taking place in most of our cities and towns, and as a measure of relief to their in-

THE LOSS OF MEX.—It seems to be the general impression that the losses sustained by the armies of the republic in the late civil war were not as heavy as those of the United States. We find this number in the English papers frequently given as though it were an established fact. It may be as well, therefore, to state that official returns in the War Department show that the loss of the Mexicans was not less than that of the United States, since the war broke out, so far as heard from. Of the 1,000,000 men made from these returns not yet handed in, including the starved prisoners, etc., will reach an aggregate of three hundred and twenty thousand. These we take into consideration the immense numbers of men we have printed in the field. The duration of the war, the terrible searches incident to operations over so vast a stretch of country, the great number of battles, sieges, combats, skirmishes, expeditions, etc., the enormous numbers of troops engaged.

The official estimate is that in times of peace the ordinary mortality for the number of men in the field would be forty thousand, which, deducted from the above total, would leave the number of men actually killed at about 1,000,000. Research far larger figures than these by taking newspaper reports of battles, etc., and making loose estimates where they had no regular data. The result has been singularly, it is true, but not uniformly, in excess of the official figures in Europe and America; and now that it is obvious that the facts even be examined dispassionately, we may express our gratification to find that our losses fall so far below the general estimates.

It is not surprising that the generals have been so much unpropitious a feeling.

They have solved credits for being, and that their skill has won success for us at the least cost of life than might have been looked for. This is the chief reason why the scientific soldier, and we cannot doubt the scientific sailor, are the most useful men of the age. Therefore, the proper examination of such data as the above.

These three hundred and twenty thousand men subtracted from the fighting material of the nation, and the millions of men in print makes the dead and permanently disabled on both sides during the war about six hundred thousand men. We presume that, if we regarded properly the effects of the war upon the reputation of the nation, its honor, north and south, as so much taken from the resources of the nation. So viewing them, while we must deplore the sacrifice of such a vast multitude at the shrine of war, yet the loss is not much more than the cost of the war.

from being exhausted after this struggle, predictions as it has been. When Secretary Cane proposed to obtain arms enough for the whole four millions of our fighting population, he was told that we had no money. We have had, though, be provided for it. Yet out of that four millions we have not lost so many but that those we have left are still a powerful army, adequate to any emergency, and ready to fight.

Still it must be evident that we need time to recover from this drain of our vital element. The peace which we have conquered is too valuable to be lightly sacrificed, and hence we must justly pause for a moment to consider that just at present we are completely unable to play the part of knight-errant all over the world. War is not the normal condition of our race, as some persons seem to imagine. Nor

When once destroyed can never be supplied.

In the native element of our population which has been the most hostile to this war, and that can only be recuperated by a lasting peace. Foreign immigration supplies this native element in the second generation, but this process is a slow one.

GEN. CUSTER'S HORSE CLAIMED BY THE FORMER OWNERS.—It will be recollected that Gen. Custer's horse was killed off in this park on the day of the grand review in this city both because of his splendid appearance and from the fact of his having run away with the general on his attempting to receive a wreath.

SATURDAY JULY 1, 1865.

According to all accounts, matters in South Carolina are in a deplorable condition. Many of the people in the interior are said to be upon the borders of starvation. The passage of Sherman's army through the State was like a stroke of paralysis. Its railroads, its public works, its industry, what there was of it, is in a state of ruin. It is in a state of anarchy. The only power that remains is the power of the sword. The only power that remains is the power of the sword. The only power that remains is the power of the sword.

According to Hardee, South Carolina is the worst whipped State in the Union. And her people are more degraded than those of any other State. It is the old law of retribution, to which there seem to be no exceptions. We know of no more forcible or terrible example of the truth of the old law of retribution, to which there seem to be no exceptions. We know of no more forcible or terrible example of the truth of the old law of retribution, to which there seem to be no exceptions.

Secession was nearly unanimous in South Carolina. In the Convention, the vote was 155 to 13. The only man who voted against secession was John Pickens. The only man who voted against secession was John Pickens. The only man who voted against secession was John Pickens.

His fanaticism was an honest fanaticism. By virtue of perpetual rebellion he at last worked himself into the belief that all his fellow citizens were his enemies. He was a fanatic. He was a fanatic. He was a fanatic.

By the way, we wonder what has become of that model free man, Milford L. Bonham. He was a free man. He was a free man. He was a free man.

President Johnson's policy. We have already cordially endorsed the wise and statesmanlike policy announced by President Johnson in his several proclamations authorizing the restoration of civil government in the late seceding States. That policy is direct and practical, recognizing the political obligations of the respective States as they existed prior to the rebellion, regarding the ordinances of secession as null and void, as well as all subsequent acts predicated upon the rebellion.

The history of that State for the last thirty years certainly "tells a moral" if it does not "speak a lesson." It is instructive and ought not to be lost upon the country. South Carolina will be the synonym for folly through all coming time.

By the way, we wonder what has become of that model free man, Milford L. Bonham. He was a free man. He was a free man. He was a free man.

in the Union as a public man of government," Hardee, he, as a President of the United States, needs to put in motion the machinery that may enable the loyal people of the State to take action upon the civil government, referring back to the date of the so-called ordinance of secession, and the civil government of the State. However, by his authority as Commander-in-Chief of the army, he prevents the rebel local authorities from exercising the right of suffrage by requiring the oath of allegiance to the United States, without which oath he is not under the Constitution and laws.

President Johnson believes that neither himself nor Congress has any constitutional right to create a veto, but that power belongs to the several States composing the Federal Union. He believes that the original authority of the Government to the present time. (See Proclamation.)

It is no means follows, as some argue, that if the States are as they were, ante bellum, that the officers who President Johnson has displaced, are the legitimate State Government, because there can be no legitimate State Government without the sanction of the United States.

The foregoing is a clear and forcible and accurate interpretation of President Johnson's policy, and the action of the Ohio State Convention was shaped in accordance with it. It is one of the most important and important theories of the day.

A powerful plea in favor of home manufactures is found in the extensive adulterations to which foreign articles are subjected. A merchant of New York told us not long ago that, being in London on one occasion, he visited the laboratory of a celebrated chemist with whom he was acquainted, and there saw samples of many different kinds of adulterated goods.

The red matter in English tomato-catchers, supposed to come from that vegetable, was what you think, reader—noting but red earth prepared in a peculiar manner! And so through the entire catalogue.

Many of these adulterations are carried on extensively in Europe than in this country, let it not be supposed that they are unknown in this country. Philadelphia, Boston, and London are only a few of the cities in which adulterations are carried on extensively.

It is quite time for us to wake up and emancipate ourselves from the thrall of dependence upon others for what we can, if we have sufficient enterprise, produce, to our own profit and varied advantage, at home.

We want a little more energy, a little more life infused into us. We are in the beginning of a new era, and now is our opportunity. The new era is before us, and now is our opportunity.

Whenever General Sherman speaks he utters words of wisdom and truth. A few days ago he received an ovation at his old home, Lancaster, Ohio, and he improved the occasion by making a brief but powerful speech.

"This is one of the largest firms in the City of New York, and are doing a very extensive business here on and the largest stock that can be found in the city."—Oscar A. Tamm, President, (Oct. 20, 1964).
"Their stock is large, and buyers may rely on it as purchased from them just as represented. Their location in business is such that they can offer better terms than any other house in the city."—Loyd C. Anderson, Ind. Oct. 20, 1964. "Their Water is of the best quality, and those who have used it can readily be convinced."
